FAST WORK FOR FAST FOOD

When I graduated from cookery school, I could have applied for jobs in ski chalets or on board ships sailing around the Caribbean. Instead, I applied to work in a fashionable fast food restaurant and suddenly found myself working very long hours in hot, sweaty kitchens full of completely crazy characters. I thought that starting at the bottom of the food chain, as opposed to the high life of skiing and sailing, would be good training. I couldn't have been more wrong.

At 7.45 each morning I stagger into the kitchen with all the other cooks, exhausted from working a 10-hour shift the night before. (1) _____. Nothing is where it should be. Vegetables have been left on the floor and raw fish has been left uncovered in the fridge. A couple of dustbins have not been emptied and everything has to be cleaned before we can begin the day's work.

(2) _____. I fill a sink with water, throw in several box loads of the stuff and wash each leaf separately. My hands are so cold I can hardly feel them. Between 9 and 10, the line chefs start arriving. (3) _____. They swan around the kitchens shouting orders at the poor cooks like me whose job it is to prepare all the ingredients.

But if anything goes wrong once the customers' orders start coming in, you can guess who gets the blame. If they run out of sauce, then it's the cook's fault for not preparing enough in the first place. (4) _____. The chefs are only under pressure at particular point in the day. The cooks are under pressure all the time.

(5) _____. This is when the waiters get told what the day's special menus are. Then, no sooner are we back in the kitchen to start the lunch service than three deliveries of food and drink arrive all at the same time. This means I get sent to sort them out. I am faced with carrying boxes of frozen chips or bottles of fruit juice from the lorries down two flights of stairs to the store rooms. By mid-afternoon, the lunchtime rush is dying down. However, I don't get anything to eat until the end of my working day, at 6 that evening. Then I am allowed to have my free staff “lunch”, by which time I’m too tired to eat.

- A. If the chicken goes cold, then it’s the cook’s fault for not keeping it in the oven longer
- B. These are the people who get all the glory
- C. Before we open at midday, all the staff meet in the restaurant.
- D. My first job of the day is shopping, and shredding leaves and lettuces for salads
- E. There’s been a break of just about four hours and the kitchen has not been tidied from last night

TAPESCRIPT:

Hello, I'm Sarah Robinson and I'm going to talk to you about free-diving. Today free-diving is an extreme sport which is very popular all around the world. However, the origins of free-diving go a long way back in history, about 4,000 years in fact, when people used to dive for pearls and to catch fish to eat.

So what is modern free-diving exactly? Also called 'breath-hold' or 'apnea', it is the art of diving without any breathing equipment. It's a sport which sets records for the deepest dive and the longest time somebody holds their breath.

There are a lot of talented free-divers, but one of the world's most successful and most popular is Tanya Streeter. Tanya grew up in Grand Cayman, an island in the Caribbean Sea, so of course, she spent a lot of her childhood snorkelling and looking at the fish and other sea life. She used to love diving as deep as possible looking for rocks and shells.

Then in 1997, Tanya did an introductory class on free-diving. She found out that she was really good so decided to carry on with it. Within months, she started to enter competitions. In 1998, she set the World Women's No Limits Record with a dive of 113 metres off the coast of the Cayman Islands. She went on to set many more records after that. Although free-diving is a really exciting sport, it can also be very dangerous. Not breathing for a very long time can cause damage to your brain. Free-divers have to learn the right breathing techniques, but they also have to be extremely physically fit. Most free-divers have a very hard training schedule. Tanya, for example, spends two hours every day either running or riding a bike. She then dives and swims in the pool for another three hours. Of course, if you want take up free-diving, I'm not suggesting you take it quite so seriously at first. You may not ever want to enter any competitions and you certainly don't have to start off in the sea. The first thing you should do is to have professional classes to learn about safety. You'll need to find a swimming pool that offers these. You should also get as fit as possible. You'll then find out that free-diving is a really wonderful way to experience the underwater world.

TAPESCRIPT:

Linda Hello, Linda speaking

Matt Oh hi, Linda This is Matt Brooks Alex White gave me your number He said you'd be able to give me some advice about moving to Banford

Linda Yes, Alex did mention you How can I help?

Matt Well, first of all - which area to live in?

Linda Well, I live in Dalton, which is a really nice suburb - not too expensive, and there's a nice park.

Matt Sounds good. Do you know how much it would be to rent a two bedroom flat there

Linda Yeah, you should be able to get something reasonable for 850 pounds per month That's what people typically pay. That doesn't include bills or anything

Matt No; That sounds alright. I'll definitely have a look there. Are the transport links easy from where you live?

Linda Well, I'm very lucky. I work in the city centre so I don't have to use public transport! go by bike

Matt Oh, I wish I could do that Is it safe to cycle around the city?

Linda Yes, it's fine And it keeps me fit. Anyway, driving to work in the city centre would be a nightmare because there's hardly any parking And the traffic during the rush hour can be bad

Matt I'd be working from home but I'd have to go to London one or two days a week

Linda Oh, that's perfect Getting to London is no problem There's a fast tram every 30 minutes which only takes 45 minutes

Matt That's good.

Linda Yeah, the train service isn't bad during the week And they run quite late at night. It's weekends that are a problem. They're always doing engineering work and you have to take a bus to Hadham and pick up the train there which is really slow. But other than that, Banford's a great place to live I've never been happier

Linda There are some nice restaurants in the city centre and a brand new cinema which has only been open a couple of months There's a good arts centre too

Matt: Sounds like Banford's got it all

Linda Yes! We're really lucky There are lots of really good aspects to living here The schools are good and the hospital here is one of the best in the country. Everyone I know who's been there's had a positive experience Oh. I can give you the name of my dentist too in Bridge Street, if you're interested I've been going to him for years and I've never had any problems

Matt Oh, OK Thanks!

Linda I'll find his number and send it to you

Matt Thanks that would be really helpful

Linda Are you planning to visit Banford soon?

Matt Yes My wife and I are both coming next week We want to make some appointments with estate agents

Linda I could meet you if you like and show you around

Matt Are you sure? We'd really appreciate that

Linda Either a Tuesday or Thursday is good for me after 5.30

Matt Thursday's preferable - Tuesday I need to get home before 6 pmcafé... opposite the station.
