In the aftermath of Super Typhoon Yagi, many people in the provinces of Thai Nguyen and Yen Bai have become homeless. Given the situation, on the evening of September 9, many kind-hearted people headed to the flood-hit areas, transporting food, life jackets, and raincoats to support the flood victims. In Facebook groups, many users have posted statuses on providing free transportation of donated necessities, life jackets, and other items to uplift communities affected by Typhoon Yagi. These acts of kindness once again demonstrate the spirit of solidarity, mutual support and compassion, which is attributed to create the strength of the entire Vietnamese nation over its more-than-thousand-year history. In the most difficult periods of times, the solidarity and companionship of Vietnamese people have further promoted and spread strongly.

Natural disasters, storms, and floods are inevitable natural phenomena. Every year, dozens of storms make landfall, causing serious damage to people and property. The tragic number of deaths, the roofs, crops, livestock submerged in flood water and images of devastation make many people upset.
