- paraphrase title using some of your own words
- overview: + a much higher percentage of total energy was supplied by renewables in Singapore and Japan than in the other two countries
  - + Singapore and South Korea saw an increase in the proportion of renewables in each of the 3 years.

Sample:

The bar chart compares four countries in terms of renewable energy as a proportion of the total supply in three different years.

Overall, a much higher percentage of total energy was supplied by renewables in Singapore and Japan than in the other two countries. Singapore and South Korea saw an increase in the proportion of renewables to supply energy in each of the years. In 2010, renewable energy accounted for 62% of the total supplied in Singapore and 50% in Japan. In contrast, the figures for South Korea and China were both only around 10%. In Singapore, the renewable energy used increased to 65% and almost 78% in 2014 and 2017. There was also a steady increase in the figures in South Korea, to 12% in 2010 and then reaching a peak of 18% in 2017. The figures fluctuated in Japan and Singapore, with the highest percentage of renewable energy supply recorded in 2014, at about 60% and 10% respectively.
