Many of us find it difficult to concentrate on a Saturday, so it's no surprise that nearly half of us waste our time at work on Saturday afternoon by looking up funny news articles on the internet, watching silly videos, or planning our next holiday. But unfortunately the problem isn't just a Saturday problem. People are wasting more and more time being distracted by the internet and social network when they should be studying or working. A report has shown how computer users waste up to eight days in a month on the internet. Most of the people who were questioned said they were distracted "all or most of the time" when they study or work online. The study showed that the internet can be bad for relationship too, as people argue with their parents who spend too much time in front of their computers or mobile device. Luckily, there is a simple answer to the problem: get off the internet and get on with life.
