III. Listen to the passage about the nomadic lifestyle in Mongolia. Then choose the best answer(1P)

1. B 2. D 3. A 4. B 5. C

Nomadic life has been an essential part of Mongolian culture for centuries. Many Mongolians still live a traditional nomadic lifestyle today, moving their herds of livestock from one grazing area to another in search of food and water. The nomads live in 'gers', which are portable felt tents that can be easily assembled and disassembled. These 'gers' are simple but functional, providing shelter from the harsh weather conditions that Mongolia is known for.

Living a nomadic life means that the Mongolian people are deeply connected to nature and the land. They rely on their animals for food, transportation, and clothing, and have a deep respect for the environment. Despite the challenges of living a nomadic lifestyle, many Mongolians cherish the freedom and independence that it provides, as well as the strong sense of community and family.

Visitors to Mongolia can experience the nomadic lifestyle by staying with a nomadic family, learning about their customs and traditions, and helping with daily tasks such as herding animals or making traditional foods. It's a unique and authentic way to experience the rich culture and history of Mongolia.
