Read the following passage and mark the correct answer

In the past, Vietnamese people used to send messages by writing letters. They carefully expressed their thoughts on paper, put the letters in envelopes, and sent them through post office service. Writing letters was slow, but it was meaningful because of the personal touch it brought.

Nowadays, things have changed dramatically. Emails and social media have become a significant part of our daily communication. They offer speed and convenience, allowing people to communicate almost anytime and anywhere.

However, some people still enjoy writing letters by hand. They think that handwritten letters are special because they show the writer’s feelings, making the communication more personal and emotional.

In summary, even though technology has changed the way we communicate significantly, the tradition of writing letters holds a special value in personal connection that we can hardly have with online communication.
