Read the following passage about cultural traditions and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the option that best fits each of the numbered blanks from 18 to 22.

Traditional festivals, far from fading into obscurity, (18) Local communities find innovative ways to preserve their heritage while adapting to contemporary life. Studies show younger generations increasingly participate in cultural celebrations, seeking connection with their roots. The groundbreaking research project (19) opened new perspectives on indigenous ceremonies last month. This extensive documentation captured how ancient rituals evolved while maintaining their core significance. Through digital archives and community engagement programs, endangered traditions find new life in the digital age. Heritage preservation demands systematic approaches. (20) Modern documentation methods work alongside traditional oral histories to ensure cultural practices endure. Throughout many regions, (21) This pioneering "Living Heritage" initiative enables communities to ghave their stories through interestive platforms.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 23 to 30.

In the southeastern Pacific Ocean, on the piece of land known as Easter Island (now a territory of Chile), stand several hundred massive stone monoliths. These carvings, called "moai," are recognizable by their oversized heads, heavy brows, long noses, elongated ears, and protruding lips. While they average four meters in height and 12.5 tonnes, the largest is almost 10 meters tall, and the heaviest weighs 86 tons. The upright sculptures are scattered around Easter Island, many installed on platforms called "ahu" along the coast, while others are more inland, and several stand near the main volcanic quarry of Rano Raraku.

The Rapa Nui people of the island built a total of 887 of these impressive statues between the 12th and 16th centuries. They were, it is said, symbols of religious and political authority, embodiments of powerful chiefs or ancestors who faced inland toward the island's villages, perhaps watching over their creators, keeping them safe. While the very creation of such monoliths - most out of volcanic ash with stone hand chisels - is an impressive feat, what is more remarkable (not to mention mysterious) is how they were transported to their resting places. In the past, most researchers associated the building and transportation of the moai with widespread deforestation on the island and the eventual collapse of the Rapa Nui civilization. This hypothesis is based, in part, on the fact that the pollen record suddenly disappeared at the same time as the Rapa Nui people stopped constructing the moai and transporting them with the help of wooden logs. How exactly would logs facilitate the movement of the statues? Most proponents of this method believe that the people created "rollers" by arranging parallel logs on
